The Road to Enlightenment

Littering a dark and dreary road lay the past relics of browser-specific tags, incompatible DOMs, broken CSS support, and abandoned browsers. We must clear the mind of the past. Web enlightenment has been achieved thanks to the tireless efforts of folk like the W3C, WaSP, and the major browser creators. The CSS Zen Garden invites you to relax and meditate on the important lessons of the masters. Begin to see with clarity. Learn to use the time-honored techniques in new and invigorating fashion. Become one with the web.

So What is This About?

There is a continuing need to show the power of CSS. The Zen Garden aims to excite, inspire, and encourage participation. To begin, view some of the existing designs in the list. Clicking on any one will load the style sheet into this very page. The HTML remains the same, the only thing that has changed is the external CSS file. Yes, really. CSS allows complete and total control over the style of a hypertext document. The only way this can be illustrated in a way that gets people excited is by demonstrating what it can truly be, once the reins are placed in the hands of those able to create beauty from structure. Designers and coders alike have contributed to the beauty of the web; we can always push it further.

Participation

Strong visual design has always been our focus. You are modifying this page, so strong CSS skills are necessary too, but the example files are commented well enough that even CSS novices can use them as starting points. Please see the CSS Resource Guide for advanced tutorials and tips on working with CSS. You may modify the style sheet in any way you wish, but not the HTML. This may seem daunting at first if you've never worked this way before, but follow the listed links to learn more, and use the sample files as a

This is the same website with two different layouts. Which do you think would be easier to code/create and why? Give at least two specific reasons why one would be easier to code than the other.

The first one is likely easier as little CSS will be needed to position the layouts. It also simply scrolls up and down instead of providing a layout that positions elements in a table-like fashion. The second also looks like it will adjust based on browser width, as evidenced by the border background image.

It's never easy...
When it comes to family.
But we can set everything straight.

Think about a website that you visit regularly that is frustrating to use. List at least two reasons this website is not user friendly.

Website URL: reddit.com/r/csshelp

The website is littered with an arcane layout and no “pop” to important elements. Everything is a dull blue hue and nothing really stands out when visiting the page. New users will be turned away when too much information is thrown at them.

Think about a website that you visit regularly that is easy to use. List at least two reasons this website is user friendly.

Website URL: d125.org

The site layout doesn’t provide quick ways to access information people actually care about. It instead provides a quick way to look at terrible-written event reminders. Plus half the links are broken because the website was restructured from some outsourced company.

Which one doesn't belong?
Place a  over the one that doesn't belong in each row.

List at least 5 things that make this a bad website design.

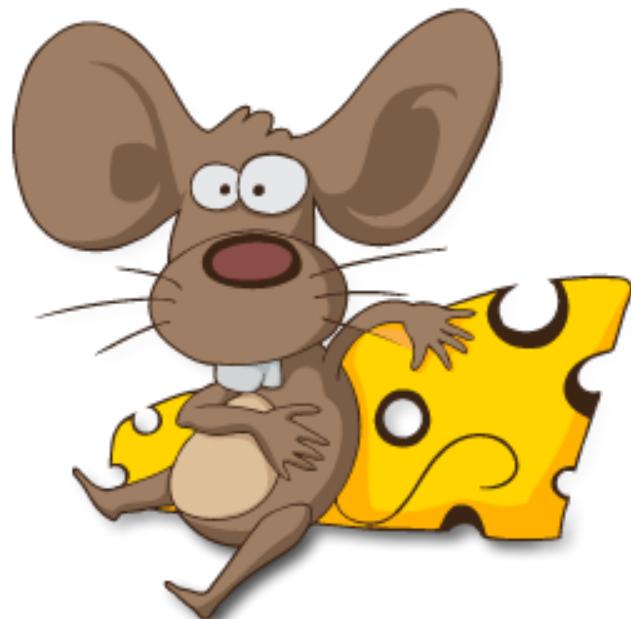

1. Lack of animated gifs that really add to the website
2. No looping “Darude - Sandstorm” in the background
3. Banner is left justified, it should be right justified
4. They’re using a Mac
5. The flash animation should have really loaded already

List 5 things a web designer can do to maintain consistency in a design.

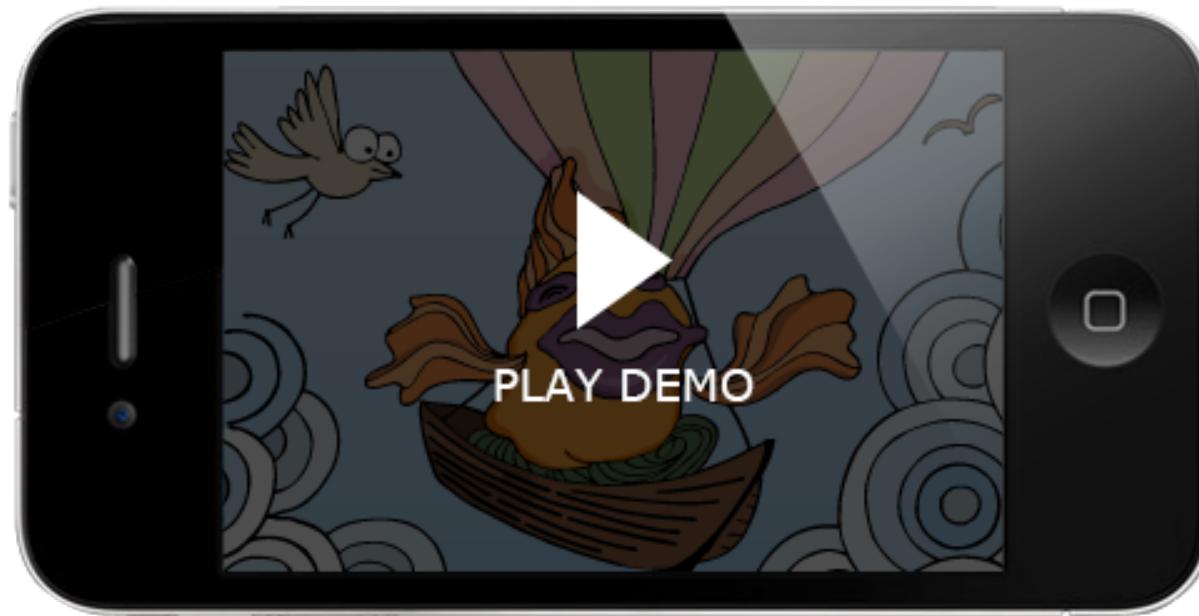

1. Add the same looping audio to each page to maintain consistency
2. Use Flash for the entire page instead of just some elements
3. Load all Javascripts on each page instead of just the one that you need
4. Maximize RAM usage - after all, unused RAM is wasted RAM!
5. Load ALL pages at the same speed - in case one page is slow, at least all the other ones match its speed.
